POETRY

THE WANDERER

How much they miss in the sheltered nest,
How little they feel who own the day!
There is a hope in the grainy mist
That moods the night in the tempest's blast;
The darkened West is burnished bright Where the falling flames outlast the night.

And a star has dawned in the Heavenly
To point the blind-blown wanderer's way,
Till the sturdy strength from the West
Shall flood with love the streaming East.
